Case Study: Upgrading Talent in a Downturn

A regional manufacturing firm was severely impacted in the last downturn and was losing thousands of dollars per day. Their controller was unable to develop a plan that would lead to profitability. Even though they had a hiring freeze in place, the company turned to Robert Half to quickly hire a new controller with extensive turnaround and cost control experience. The new controller helped the company eliminate unprofitable products and right-size its labor force. By upgrading the skills of their controller, the company returned to profitability and achieved double-digit growth when the downturn ended.
